Primary Source, an undergraduate journal of history published by students of Indiana University, seeks to bring undergraduates into the historical conversation, strengthen their voices within all historical fields, and promote the understanding of a variety of historical viewpoints through the publication of quality undergraduate historical interpretation. Publishing original works is an important endeavor at the university level, but it can be especially difficult for undergraduate students. Therefore, Primary Source seeks to offer undergraduates exploring all branches of history the opportunity to show the world their ideas.

The editors of Primary Source publish a new edition every semester with cutting edge undergraduate historical scholarship. Therefore, we accept new submissions due by the beginning of October for the fall edition and by the middle of February for the spring publication. Submissions should be sent electronically as attachments to primary@indiana.edu. Please direct questions to the same address. Finally, we ask undergraduates interested in submitting a piece of their original work to format it in the following manner.

The essay should include a title page listing the title of the work, the author's name, university, and class (i.e. freshman, etc.), and an abstract of 100 words maximum. Essays should be no longer than twenty (20) pages, excluding the title page and bibliography. Authors should format citations according to Chicago style. Finally, the essay should appear in 12 point Times New Roman Font and be double-spaced. It should also have one-inch margins, with pagination centered at the bottom of the page.
